

Course Outcomes of Political Science

- Disciplinary knowledge: Students may have a general understanding of the principal theories that have shaped the discipline.
- They can be cognizant of the current state of the disciplinary debate on these theories, and they should be aware of countervailing viewpoints.
- Students can be aware of the policy and ethical consequences of various theoretical perspectives.
- Analytical skills/Critical thinking: Students will be able to access a broad range of research material in their field, including both primary and secondary sources.
- Students must be demonstrated the ability to write, discuss, and defend Nation and International relationship in their field based on these research materials.
- Technical and applied skills: Students will be developed good written and verbal skills. They should be able to conduct research consistent with the practices of the discipline under Indian political thinker and western political thinkers also.
- They will be able to access and use web-based information of State government and National government of India.
- They will be adopted familiarity with the disciplinary concepts and vocabulary employed by political Specialist in Indian Constitution, Law, and legislator.
- It can be better comprehend the multidimensional nature of development.
- Student will be able to discuss to participate in debate on National T.V Channels about different factors responsible for differing levels and type's development.
- They will be able to analyze the connections among political, economic, and social processes and development.

- Student will be aware of methods for identifying potentially effective development strategies.
- He can approach from rural sarpanch to Prime Minister Level to get participation in Politics.

Scope of the Subject:

- Political Science is a diverse discipline that includes four generally recognized sub-fields: Indian Politics, Political Theory, Comparative Politics, and International Relations. Two majors are offered by the Department of Political Science:
- The political science has the major National and international affairs of political science. The latter major allows close ties with the other participating departments in the International Affairs Program:
- Modern Languages and Classics, History, Major Issues in contemporary politics, Indian foreign policy, Indian Political thinkers, Western Political Thinkers, Anthropology, and Economics. Additionally, the Department, particularly through the joint appointment of one of its faculty, has close ties with the Canadian-American Indian and other studies.
- It Develop in students a broad knowledge of political phenomena, practical skills of analysis and communication, and an understanding of theoretical approaches to politics.
- People can apply political theories and concepts to gain analytical leverage over historical and contemporary political events.
- Critically analyze political texts through criticism, constructive engagement, and lateral comparison and contrast.
- Publicly present and defend a political research projects in an engaging, cogent way.